"I'm a huge fan of modern architecture and its influence upon interior design in the form of exposed brickwork, iron frameworks, timber panelling and beams.

However, design is a layered process and it's important when using industrial elements to combine these with soft, warmer tones and textures through furnishings and fabrics in order to create an inviting, homely environment. This could be anything from rich, smoky velvets to grey flannels and soft leathers." Image courtesy of Tara Bernerd
